The World As I See It: Real World Poetry Conrad Jarrett

This collection was inspired by real life events that I have noticed from the people around me as I went about my daily life for over a year. I captured the passion, the heartaches, the disappointments, the make ups and the break ups. The conscious minds, the ignorance. The book is a combination of real world emotions depicted by average folks in their daily lives. I call it “The World as I See It’ and I sub titled it “Real World Poetry”

This is by no means a traditional poetry book, everything from the content, to the formatting to the writing style reflects this. The poems are written in a very simplistic manor, a choice I made because I felt it would best capture the raw emotion of the experiences that I was writing about. I wanted them to be relatable and simple enough that the reader would understand but at the same time simple enough to make the reader think and form their own opinions. You will notice that throughout the book I simplified the titles to the poems. I did this because I felt these poems were open to interpretation and I want the reader to form his or her own thought process without me influences them with suggestive titles.

The poems lean heavily towards love, specifically the disappointment of love. It also addresses issues that we all face on an average day. The tone of the book will seem somewhat negative, as I attack the very moral issues in our society however, I implore you to view the content as motivation. I believe that in order for us to truly eliminate an issue, we must first acknowledge that it exists and more importantly, we must first acknowledge that we are a part of the problem. This book challenges that perception.
