Two killers, two fatal agendas, two harassed cops, one broken nation. The establishment elites of political correctness have been targeted and their time is running out. A series of bloody deaths is causing panic in a city in England. Someone is murdering teenagers among the underclass by pushing a fashionable but lethal recreational drug which, with morbid humour, the mainstream media have termed 'snuff'. But is the snuff-killer just some crazy drug dealer who is pushing a deadly narcotic regardless of the consequences or is he killing these young people deliberately for some deeper motivation of his own? Two police officers, Detective Inspector Bapoto Smith and Detective Sergeant Gloria Kovac, are a part of the task force unit working the case. Lacking any forensic evidence or public support, they must pursue their investigation hindered further by the puerile restraints of the political directives, policies, and procedures that make up modern policing priorities. At the same time a second murderer, Hereward, is on a deadly mission of his own. Hereward is abducting members of the political and cultural establishment. For fifty years these reactionaries of the social elite who claim to be 'progressive' have adamantly refused to listen to anyone who disagreed with them. Now Hereward is making them listen. The corpses of those to whom he speaks are subsequently found dead by dehydration, bruised from the chains which had bound them. These three storylines slowly come together in a society spiralling out of control. Set against a background of economic decline, the rise of Islamic Jihad, and the changing public attitudes toward the social engineering imposed by the ideologies of multiculturalism and feminism as their long-term consequences become apparent, "The Most Hated Man" is unlike any other cops and killers thriller you have ever read. It is a chilling vision of the near future brought about by those who exercise authoritarian power over the ordinary citizen with the strict speech-codes and thought-police taboos of political conformity. It is a future that is rapidly becoming the present. It is a story for our times.
