You're about to discover the exciting story by Lola Rose...

(Sirona Winchester had been raised in a wealthy home in high society, but she had begun to get a different perspective on the world when she went to teachers' college. Now she had gotten a teaching job in the shape-shifting community – and her fiancé was the founder of the Humans First Movement. Sirona enjoyed her new job, as taxing and confusing as it was, but her fiancé, Barton Simmons, continued to track her activities through his connections. These included the area police, since Simmons was a young lawyer who often took criminal depositions. He also had a powerful family who ran a charter school organization, and, more important, Barton Simmons was a skilled computer hacker. Sirona was especially concerned when she had to schedule parent conferences. Most of her students were shape-shifters, and one was a controversial were-tiger cub. Since the cub's parents were in space, their were-tiger butler served as a parental stand-in for the teacher conference. Barton Simmons burst in on her conference with this were-butler, Rollo Nightingale, and the angry Sirona had to summon help using her teacher's alarm. Barton was dragged away by police, but not before Sirona had returned his engagement ring. The police officers of the walled shape-shifter city warned Barton to stay away from Sirona and confine his Humans First Movement to the media. Meanwhile, the tiger cub and an owl shifter stole Barton's necktie from his locked car so the shifter community would have a record of his scent. Barton was too angry after his encounter with the police to notice his missing tie. Meanwhile, Rollo, the were-tiger, had helped Sirona compose herself to finish her evening's work. He and Marfan, the were-tiger cub, immediately made sure the whole were-community became aware of Sirona's problem and knew Simmons' scent. Sirona herself relaxed at home, happy to be free of Barton. Forbidden any contact with Sirona, whom he had counted on marrying since kindergarten, Barton worked to get information about her from other sources. One of his sources was Sirona's mother, and he also had allies in the county school bus barn. Barton prepared his counter-move carefully. Sirona's class would be going with the other third graders on a spring field trip, and Barton's friends in the bus barn insured the vehicle would break down in a mountainous, wooded area. When the bus broke down, Rollo and the other parent chaperones immediately realized what had happened and why. Fortunately, Mrs. Harper, the other third grade teacher, was an experienced naturalist. She volunteered to lead them to the nearest town, with help from the shape-shifter chaperones. The students did their nature work and spent the night in brush huts built by shifter parents. No one was aware that the media was making the most of their plight.

Meanwhile, Barton and his companions had followed the students' trail, but ordinary wolves, warned by their were-brethren, trapped them in the brush huts the students had used the night before. Rollo, in his tiger form, led the rescuers to Barton's small party while the school group was escorted to the nearest town. During this ordeal, Sirona has realized that she loves Rollo. With the help of Rollo's employers, the couple dazzles Sirona's wealthy parents. A lovely wedding follows at the were-tiger Embassy.)
